French Studies

The aim of the French Language programme is to provide students with a firm command of French and familiarise them with research in the field as well as with the literature and culture of France. The goal is providing the students with the tools, knowledge, and skills necessary for scholarly work as well as encouraging them to work independently, critically and analytically.

French Language is a subsidiary subject (minor) in the Degree Programme in Languages and Literature. French Language is comprised of 60 ECTS credits: 25 ECTS of Basic Studies and 35 ECTS of Intermediate Studies. The smallest package for taking French as a subsidiary subject is the Basic Studies package (25 ECTS). Advanced Studies in the French Language can be completed in other Finnish Universities.

French is the native language for 100–115 million people; approximately 220 million people worldwide speak French, and it is the official language of approximately 32 countries. It is the second most spoken language after German in the EU. In addition to the professions of teacher, translator, or interpreter, the French Studies subsidiary subject will be useful to students who are planning a career in international business or administration.

In addition to language skills, studies of the French Language emphasise the study and understanding of cultural backgrounds. Literature, culture, and history form an essential part of the identities of France and Francophone countries. The international character of French enables students to familiarise themselves with the multicultural world outside of Europe as well. Students also have the possibility to complete some of their French studies in France at the universities of Artois, Bourgogne, or Rennes.

Admission requirements

Students must successfully pass a proficiency test in order to be accepted to commence studies in French Language. The dates for and information regarding the tests will be posted on the subject's bulletin board. Usually, the test is arranged twice a year; the first test in the spring, and the second at the end of August or at the beginning of September. Students taking the test should have a good knowledge of French acquired either in Finnish upper secondary school or elsewhere. Students applying for the right to study in the programme as a non-degree student must also pass the proficiency test. Students can participate in the courses in the French Language programme immediately upon passing the proficiency test. The proficiency test is not required if the student has been accepted to study French in some other Finnish university. The teaching is organised annually on the basis of resources and demand. Courses typically begin in the autumn term. Students should take particular note that skills courses have prerequisites and should thus be taken in the correct order.

Study guidance

Study guidance is provided by the programme's lecturers, mainly during their individual office hours.

Employment prospects

Basic and Intermediate studies in the French Language programme provide the students with the official qualification to teach French in Finnish secondary and upper secondary schools. French, along with English, is the main language of work and negotiations in the European Union, which is why people with a good command of French are increasingly needed in, e.g. administrative organisations of state and municipalities, in institutes of higher education, research centres, and international organisations. As a result of the integration of economic markets, French has also further strengthened its standing in business life.

Practical information

Course grading

Exams are usually graded numerically 0–5:

- 0 = fail (refusé/e)
- 1 = sufficient (passable)
- 2 = satisfactory (satisfaisant)
- 3 = good (bien)
- 4 = very good (très bien)
- 5 = excellent (excellent)
- Or Pass/Fail

An overall grade 1–5 is awarded after completion of each study package (see above)
