Admission requirements and commencement of studies

Cultural Anthropology and Archaeology hold a joint entrance examination annually. Based on this examination, a study right is granted to 20 students. Archaeology and Cultural Anthropology share the Basic Studies package. During the first year, by the end of March, students must choose between the two subjects and declare their major. Both programmes accept 10 new students annually as major-subject students. All students presently enrolled and registered at the University of Oulu may study Archaeology as a subsidiary (minor) subject. Students majoring in Archaeology may freely choose their subsidiary subjects already during the completion of Basic Studies.

Study guidance

Study guidance is provided by the University Lecturer Timo Ylimaunu, tel +358 29 448 3236. For the first year students, tutoring is organised in small groups.

Archaeology

Archaeology studies human life and culture from prehistory to the present primarily through material sources, which include objects, fixed structures or chemical changes in the soil caused by humans. Archaeology is multidisciplinary by nature. At the University of Oulu, an anthropological approach to the past is emphasised, with the aim of understanding and explaining culture and its change. Teaching and research at the University of Oulu focuses on the Northern cultures and cultural heritage as well as the global phenomena and processes of the past from the perspective of the Northern world.

Archaeologists are multidisciplinary professionals of research and preservation of material culture. They work together with land users and authorities responsible for environmental protection. In addition to general archaeological knowledge and skills, the studies emphasise universal cultural processes and research methods. The central goal is to develop a good command of the archaeological research process and receive diverse abilities to work in different posts of cultural preservation.

Courses in Archaeology include attending lectures, working in small groups, reading literature, and completing different written assignments and exercises. Alternative methods have to be agreed upon with the person responsible for the course. Students of archaeology have good opportunities for student exchanges in universities abroad. Subsidiary (minor) subjects that support Archaeology include Cultural Anthropology, History, Art History, Museology, Geology, Geography, Biology and Environmental Protection.

Practical information

In the studies of Archaeology, various different teaching methods are used, including practical training periods in the laboratories of Archaeology and field practice courses. At the beginning of each academic year, there is a new syllabus, which can be read at the programme's website (<http://www.oulu.fi/arkeologia/node/26812>) (In Finnish). The working methods and literature will be announced at the beginning of each course.

Other important information for the students, such as information sessions, is made available on the programme's notice board as well as the website. At the beginning of each term, students are required to enrol for the University at the Student Centre. The University has to be notified of changes of address either at the Student Centre or in WebOodi.

Studies in Archaeology begin with the introductory course. Examinations can be taken on the exam dates of the faculty and degree programmes and in Examinarium.

Lectures in other degree programmes or international studies, to be agreed upon separately, can compensate for courses in Archaeology. In exams, students must always declare the number of ECTS credits and the code and name of the course that is compensated. Completion of the courses is recorded in WebOodi. Study attainments are kept for six months after the publication of the results. Studies in Archaeology can also be done in the summer.

Employment prospects

Traditionally, studies in Archaeology have prepared students for work in museums, administrations of cultural heritage and as researchers, but the studies qualify students for work in different posts related to the fields of research, presentation, invocation and protection of the past. The aim of the studies is to improve diverse abilities in work related to cultural heritage and cultural environments. For students studying to become history teachers, studies in Archaeology offers a solid basis to teach courses related to history of the human kind before written sources. Studies in Archaeology also provide students with a steady edifying basis for understanding our Northern identity when working in different fields of cultural life.

Study packages and learning outcomes

Upon completion of the Basic Studies of Archaeology and Cultural Anthropology, students will be able to describe the scientific history, research methods and different theoretical foundations of the programmes. Students will be able to define the terms of Archaeology and Cultural Anthropology and describe the different fields of research. Students will be able to explain the interaction between people and environment in a long-term perspective as well as define the basic terminology of the different fields of Anthropology.

Upon completion of the Intermediate Studies of Archaeology, students will have a diverse understanding of the different fields, research methods and theoretical perspectives of Archaeology. Students will have skills to use the research methods of Archaeology and document information. Students will have abilities to prepare and carry out independent projects related to researching and applying scientific information. Additionally, students will be able to compile small-scale theses and written and oral presentations based on their expertise.

Upon completion of the Advanced Studies of Archaeology, students will have the required qualifications for conducting and planning different types of research in Archaeology as well as utilising archaeological information. Students will be able to produce scientific information and present the different phases and results of theses in written as well as oral forms. Students will be professionals, who are able to do independent, challenging work that requires analysis, creativity and ethical evaluation. Students will also be able to work as experts in different tasks.

Upon completion of the course, students will be able to identify different archaeological sites and characterise them as a process and part of the environment. They will know the conventions of archaeological survey, search for sites, documentation and reporting, and to use them independently. Students will be able to assess the significance of field data for land use and recognise the legislative scope of archaeological conservation of cultural heritage. Additionally, students will have basic knowledge of the use of a total station, RTK-GPS device and terrestrial laser scanner in conducting archaeological documentation and collecting geographic information. In addition to processing field data, students will have basic knowledge of the use of data archives relevant for fieldwork.

Contents:

An archaeological excursion to the sites of Northern Ostrobothnia, duration one day; introduction to survey (2 hours) and familiarising students with the use of GPS devices in the surroundings of the university; field training under supervision (60 hours), and laboratory exercises related to site reports from the sites (16 hours); supervised familiarisation with surveying devices for the duration of four days; laboratory exercises regarding transferring field data into Geographic Information Systems (GIS)

Upon completion of the course, students will be able to refer to different studies in the field, argue clearly for their opinions and compare their own views with the research of their field in a diverse manner. Students will be able to reflect on what they learn based on what they have previously learned.

Contents:

Students will participate in guest lectures, the public defence of a doctoral thesis, seminars or similar sessions and produce a learning diary or an equivalent written assignment. Students must attend a total of 24 hours of guest lectures or sessions of public defence of a doctoral thesis. It is also possible to complete the course by alternative methods agreed upon separately (for example by taking a specialised course)

Mode of delivery:

Opettajat: Vesa-Pekka Herva

Opintokohteen kielet: Finnish

ECTS Credits:

40 ECTS credits

Language of instruction:

Finnish

Timing:

Fifth year

Learning outcomes:

Upon completing the course, students can independently carry out research work. Students use relevant research methods and theories in their work. Students can present the research process and results in written form as scientific writing

Contents:

Producing an Master's Thesis

Mode of delivery:

Self study

Learning activities and teaching methods:

Recommended length for the thesis is approx. 60 pages. If the thesis is based on self-collected observational materials, i.e., independent field objects or material study, 40 pages is sufficient. A Master's Thesis can be a written work based on archaeological source materials, e.g., a collection of objects and archive materials. The thesis can also be presented in other formats, such as on a CD, as an HTML page, or as a PDF document. A Master's Thesis in portfolio form is also possible. In that case, the thesis folder can be comprised of, e.g., objects, pictures, or software in addition to a written summary. It can contain video or multimedia presentations. Possibility to produce a Master's Thesis in portfolio form should be agreed upon individually with the professor
