Admission requirements

Film Studies can be studied as a minor subject by any student presently registered and enrolled at the University of Oulu. The commencement of studies in the programme does not require special enrolment –studies commence simply by participating in the lectures or by signing up for exams. Any student is free to attend the lectures, but only a limited number of participants may participate in practical courses and seminars; therefore students must sign up for these in advance via WebOodi.

Study guidance

Study guidance is offered by the Lecturer of Film Studies, tel. +358 29 448 3337. The lecturer is available during office hours and at other times by appointment. Information regarding lectures, practical courses and seminars as well as other current events of the term can be found on the programme's website and on its bulletin board.

Academic Affairs Secretary Päivi Kynkäänniemi, tel. +358 29 448 3313, provides guidance for questions concerning accreditation, signing up for exams as well as other practical matters concerning studying at the University.

Film Studies

The primary object of study in Film Studies is film. However, film is part of a wider audiovisual media culture and is closely related to "traditional" audiovisual media such as television and radio as well as a wide range of so-called new media. Courses in Film Studies familiarise students with film and audiovisual media culture as historical, cultural and aesthetic phenomena. The main focus of the studies is on technologically, aesthetically and institutionally established film, the history and presence of which also provides a perspective for analysis of the development and present state of wider audiovisual culture. Film Studies provides the students with the fundamental skills needed for theoretical analysis and examination of aesthetic features and institutional relations of films and their development. In addition, Film Studies aims to provide students with an understanding of media culture and its development and technological manifestations in a wider historical context. Audiovisual media culture is such a fundamental part of contemporary society that acquiring an understanding of it is essential for all cultural studies. Therefore, taking Film Studies as a subsidiary (minor) subject is particularly beneficial to all cultural disciplines oriented towards the humanities or social studies. The subject also provides the students aiming to become teachers with the qualifications to teach media in schools. Students planning to become teachers should complete the 13 ECTS credit Media Education package which consists of three Basic Level courses: Introduction to the Study of Media Culture; Basics of Media Education; and Practical Media Education.

Employment prospects

Students who aim for careers in the fields of culture, art and communication will find a background in film studies useful. In addition, the subject provides the students aiming to become teachers with the official qualification to teach the subject in the Finnish school system.

Practical information:

Exams

The exams for both Basic and Intermediate Level courses can be taken on the examination dates of the Faculty of Humanities as well as on the examination dates of the degree group (Group II – Cultural Studies). These examination dates are primarily meant for so-called book exams, and students must sign up for these 10 days in advance via Weboodi. The sign up is only required for book exams. Formal lectures have their own, separate examination times and require no sign-up. Signing up for lecture examinations is only necessary in the case of a retake of a lecture examination, which may be taken on the faculty's examination dates or the degree group-specific examination dates. In this case (i.e. signing up for retake exams), students must supply the name of the course and the date when the course was originally taken. Formal lecture examinations should only be taken on the faculty's/degree group's examination dates upon separate agreement with the lecturer, especially if a long time has passed since the student's participation in the lecture. All Film Studies exams are marked by the Lecturer of Film Studies unless otherwise noted.

Course essays

For some courses it is recommended (or stipulated) that students submit essays or book essays. Information and instructions on such options can be found on the Film Studies website and bulletin board.

Explanation of course instructions

Lecture and set course literature: Students are required to participate in the lectures and take an exam based on the set course readings.

Set course literature and/or lecture: The course might not be held every year. Therefore, students are not required to participate in the lecture and can complete the course by book exam.

Identification and studies

Students must always mark their student number on exam papers, home essays or other projects. If a student's work is such that it might be used for more than one course, students must denote the specific course that they wish to complete with the exam, essay or other project.

Study packages and learning outcomes

Upon completion of the Basic Level Film Studies package, the students will have acquired informational expertise and conceptual skills needed for critical analysis of film and the study of film. Students can understand a film in its historical context and as a part of wider media culture. Students are able to compare and see the relations between the main characteristics of different trends in film theory as well as distinguish between various narrative and stylistic features of films. In addition, based on their individual preferences, students will have an understanding of the fundamental questions regarding one of the following areas of focus: media education, genre theory, or film and the study of history. After completing the elective practical courses, students will have acquired the skills needed either for planning and executing a short film or for weighing and applying various practical methods of media education aimed at various target groups.

Upon completion of the Intermediate Level Film Studies package, the students will have a versatile understanding of the critical perspectives, theories and methods of film studies. The students are able to perceive the vastness and diversity of film and audiovisual media culture as a field of study. In terms of knowledge, the aim is to further students' understanding of classical and new film theories, study methods and the history of film, as well as to further their ability to analyse audiovisual narratives. Students will have the practical skills needed for critical examination of various views and trends of study in film studies, and are able to understand the relationships between various aesthetic, technological, economic and social phenomena of film and audiovisual media culture. The students are also able to apply the knowledge they have acquired, and are able to utilize it in the context of essays, miniature theses, presentations or similar independent projects.
