Learning outcomes:

Part A: The course deals with the origins and development of societies in the Old and New Worlds. It examines the introduction of food production and its irreversible consequences for humanity, and analyses the trends toward increasing economic, social, and political complexity that led to the rise of early states. Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to describe the processes that led to plant and animal domestication and the eventual rise of preindustrial states throughout the world.

Part B: Upon completing the course, students can describe the central developments in northern Finnish culture from the 17th century to modern day. Students can also discuss changes in the nature-dependent way of life, adaption to it, and social and cultural factors affecting it, from an ethnographical perspective, using examples.

Contents:

Part A: Factors and patterns which shape the development of cultures.

Part B: The change of the nature-dependent way of life, and its ecological, social, technical and economical aspects and their effects on northern Finland from the 17th century to modern day.Mode of delivery:
